This 2-day forum aims to bring together graduates and researchers interested in discussing works in progress and exploring new research opportunities in health economics. The agenda will provide an interactive setting for attendees to share ongoing projects, collaborate, and identify future areas of research. Participants should plan to attend the full 2 days and actively participate by presenting their own research as an author or serving as a discussant to provide feedback on others' work. This engagement will help further the goals of sharing knowledge and identifying research needs. The gala dinner scheduled for June 27th will offer a more informal opportunity for networking and conversation around the topics covered.
