Merton College

Five items from the library at Merton College, Oxford.

Merton College Library has its origins in the 1270s when the college began building a collection of shared manuscript books for use by the fellows. Through donations, bequests, and purchases the number of books grew to over 1200 volumes by 1500. These were primarily books for study rather than for display or for private devotion. Of the 328 medieval manuscripts in the Merton library today, the vast majority were already in the college before the Reformation. The collection has a special significance

Featured Collection

Chinese Maps, Manuscripts and Printed Books

Over 1,000 items from the Bodleian's Chinese maps, manuscripts and printed books collections, acquired since the 17th century.

The Bodleian Library's Chinese collections date back to the earliest period of the Library's history. Sir Thomas Bodley himself was instrumental in building up the collection, and during the following century the Library acquired other Chinese works from several bequests. The Bodleian now holds as many as a quarter of all the extant Chinese books that arrived in Europe in the 17th century.

Towards the end of the 19th century the Library acquired two large collections of missionary publications. These works have an interest which goes beyond their value as expositions of Christian doctrine: some are written in local dialects, others provide glimpses of the popular Chinese religion and social customs which the missionaries encountered in the course of their work; all illustrate the process whereby traditional Chinese block-printing was gradually replaced by Western typography.

Digitized items include MS.Chin.c.15 and MS.Chin.c.37, two painted albums depicting the manners and customs of the peoples inhabiting mountainous regions of Yunnan, Guizhou and southwest China; and the Selden Map of China, one of the first Chinese maps to reach Europe.

More significance than value: Explaining developments in the Sino-Japanese contest over the Senkaku/Diaoyu Islands

Abstract: The Senkaku/Diaoyu Islands are presently the focus of a dangerous contest between the People's Republic of China and Japan, one that even now has the potential to spark a military conflict that could draw in the United States. How has this come about? Whether seen from a strategic, economic, or historical perspective, the value of the islands does not appear to merit the risks of such a contest. Consequently, what has driven the escalation is not anything particular to the islands themselves,...

Securing New Space: On Satellite Cyber-Security

James Pavur

Wolfson College

A thesis submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy

Hilary 2021

Abstract

Satellites offer critical services impacting the lives of billions around the world. However, the cyber-security properties of space systems are poorly understood. As the next generation of space missions begins to launch, there exists an acute need for robust and open research on space systems security.

This thesis offers a first step towards meeting that need, presenting a general method for uncovering novel cyber-physical security problems at the intersection of outer space and cyber-space. The foundation for this contribution is an analysis of historical space security incidents and emergent trends in space technologies and attacker capabilities.

Our method is developed through in-depth analysis of the security and privacy properties of modern satellite broadband services. Using real-world experiments,

Oxford Common File Layout

OCFL Specifications

This Oxford Common File Layout (OCFL) specification describes an application-independent approach to the storage of digital information in a structured, transparent, and predictable manner. It is designed to promote long-term object management best practices within digital repositories.

Specifically, the benefits of the OCFL include:

- Completeness, so that a repository can be rebuilt from the files it stores
- Parsability, both by humans and machines, to ensure content can be understood in the absence of original software
- Robustness against errors, corruption, and migration between storage technologies
- Versioning, so repositories can make changes to objects allowing their history to persist
- Storage diversity, to ensure content can be stored on diverse storage infrastructures including conventional filesystems and cloud object stores

OXFORD RELIEF is entrusted to Friends Relief Service whose voluntary workers* act with care, economy and a personal touch regardless of frontiers, race, politics, class or creed. Many countries have benefited and now the peoples of Austria, Poland and the British Zone of Germany are getting most attention. F.R.S. personnel is less than 40% Quaker, 20% C. of E., many Free Church etc., and some Roman Catholics, united in service.

WE THANK ALL WHO HAVE helped us raise £20,000 in 14 months, plus clothing, etc., worth £10,000, in six months, for European Relief.

Gifts as below will be welcome

(if no local body now collecting for Europe):—
MONEY FOR FOOD, MEDICAL SUPPLIES, Etc., for children, the aged, and special cases. (This does not reduce our rations.) Please make cheques payable to "Gradely Relief," cross and post to Barclays Old Bank, High Street, Oxford. Sir Alan Fim will acknowledge.
CLOTHING, FOOTWEAR, UNIFORMS, TOWELS, BEDDING, BLACKOUTS, MENDING MATERIALS, Etc. (including clean, mending articles for repair by Displaced Persons sadly needing work), to—"Gradely," 42, Hythe Bridge Street, Oxford. Lady Franks will acknowledge (if address supplied).

A photograph of a group of people working at laptops in a modern office setting. The text "DIGITAL SCHOLARSHIP" is overlaid in the center. In the foreground, a man with glasses and a beard is focused on his laptop. To his left, a woman is also working. On the table, there are two cans of Diet Coke, a glass of orange juice, and some papers. In the background, other people are working at their desks, and a man in a suit is visible. The overall atmosphere is one of collaborative work and digital scholarship.
